

MEMORIAL DAY

Appropriately Observed---Address in Assembly Hall by

REV. DR. L. M. COLFELT

Maj. William Watson Post and Company L Attend as Bodies—Special Music for the Occasion.

The usual Memorial Day services were held here last Thursday in Assembly Hall. The members of Company L formed at the Armory and marched to the Post room where they were joined by the members of the G. A. R., when all proceeded to Assembly Hall. Special music was a feature of the program, under direction of Prof. S. H. Koontz, Miss Grace Stewart presiding at the piano. Rev. Dr. L. M. Colfelt was introduced by Hon. J. H. Longenecker and delivered an excellent and appropriate address. After the exercises the graves in the several cemeteries were decorated.

Dr. Colfelt's Address

Members of the G. A. R.:

I desire to return my thanks for the honor done me by your request for me to address you upon this occasion. It is extremely difficult to realize that the boys of 1861 are the mature men of 1912 and the mature men of 1861 are now feeling the infirmities of age and that for some of them the final muster-roll is nearly ready. To many indeed in this Assembly Hall the war is only a tradition and a history not differing widely from other chapters in the annals of our beloved land. There are others present who participated in the tremendous struggle that tried men's souls and came back to civil life to enjoy the profound gratitude of their fellow countrymen, and no place has been too good for them, no honors too bright. But others, alas, who marched from their quiet homes in the north to fight the battles of their country laid their bodies in Southern graves.

No braver men than they ever fought on the field of Marathon or shouted for liberty in the Swiss Alps than our Brothers in Black, who plunged into the exploded mine at Petersburg, sulphurous as hell's crater, than the men who walked Vicksburg with fire, cast off at Atlanta and felt their way to the sea, took Mission Ridge at a single run through scorching flames, fought the battle "above the clouds" at Chattanooga and "saw God," as one of them said, at Gettysburg. Flowers will never grow this year, nor any year, as generous with red as they were with their blood, nor any so white as their honorable record.

And we are gathered here today to give honor, not only to the living heroes, but to the noble dead and to learn some of the lessons of duty which the day, with its sad and joyous memories, teaches. New growths are pushing up from the bottom of society and the battle scenes of the Civil War are growing dim to the new generation. But God forbid that the country should forget its brave defenders. She will decorate their graves today with flowers and although these flowers shall fade the memory of her brave soldiers will be forever green. Battle flags may decay and the grass grow green over the graves where they sleep so well, but their brave deeds will forever remain as an imperishable chapter in the glorious history of this republic.

John A. Everhart

John A. Everhart, son of Harry and Jennie Everhart, of Broad Top City, died in the Huntingdon Hospital on May 26.

While playing on May 21 he fell over a hoop, falling across a board nailed below a gate. He was taken to Huntingdon where an operation was performed May 24, which showed a rupture of the spleen and other injuries. He died Sunday, May 26, and the body was brought back to his home where funeral services were held Wednesday morning, conducted by Rev. F. W. McGuire of Saxton. He was a bright little boy and bore his suffering bravely. The unusual and unexpected accident brought a shadow over the entire community; his parents have the deep sympathy of all.

WILSON WILL WIN

Delegate to Convention Predicts His Nomination and Election.

Asked concerning his view of the outcome of the Baltimore Convention, Dr. Americus Enfield, one of the delegates from the Nineteenth Pennsylvania District, predicted both the nomination and election of Hon. Woodrow Wilson.

GOVERNOR WOODROW WILSON

Dr. Enfield said enthusiastically: "Governor Wilson will be nominated for President on the second or fourth ballot. He now has 323 instructed delegates. Clark has 276, Underwood 82, Harmon 32, Marshall 30, and the balance are uninstructed. The rapid drift to Bryan by the uninstructed delegates makes the nomination of Wilson almost certain on the second ballot. The New York World, the Baltimore Sun, and other prominent newspapers have come out for Wilson in the past ten days.

"With Wilson's nomination at Baltimore, his election will be certain. Party leaders have come to a realization of the fact that Wilson will be the safest man to bring victory to the Democratic cause in November. He will carry New York, New Jersey, Ohio and Indiana, with a strong possibility of carrying Pennsylvania. If Wilson is nominated the independent press of the country will be with him. The independent voter is the man who will count this fall. The several Democratic candidates are all good men and would secure some of the independent vote, but Wilson is the stronger, both East and West. Wilson is safe and sound. He is neither radical or erratic. His nomination will appeal strongly to the good sense of the American people in their desire for a change.

"Clark is a splendid man, but he is now filling the third highest office in the gift of the nation, and as an able presiding officer of the House of Representatives we cannot spare him in the next Congress which will also be Democratic.

"Therefore, a great opportunity, as well as a great responsibility confronts the delegates that will meet in Baltimore on June 25. Every man should forget any prejudice he may individually have in order that he can use his calm and deliberate judgment in the selection of a candidate.

"The nominee of the Baltimore Convention must be a sound and fearless man on all fundamental principles of Democratic ideas. He must have decided convictions and the courage to announce and define them. In this great crisis Wilson is the man to lead. He is like a towering mountain, the nearer you approach the bigger and grander he becomes. His prompt action in punishing the grafting council of Atlantic City will increase his strength until he is nominated. He now looms up big, powerful and invincible. As a high-toned, intelligent, honorable man the American people will have the satisfaction of having the Latin sentence repeated, 'The voice of the people is the voice of God.'

WOODROW WILSON

Should Be Nominated at the Baltimore Convention, Says

THE NEW YORK WORLD

He Can Carry the Doubtful Eastern States and Be Elected President of the Union in November.

The following powerful editorial is copied in full from the New York World of May 30:

Woodrow Wilson of New Jersey should be the Democratic candidate for President.

That is the opinion of The World. That is the counsel of the New Jersey primaries. That is the logic of the situation.

It is time for facts and not for theories. Judson Harmon might prove a strong candidate in New York and Ohio, but his nomination has been rendered impossible. Champ Clark would be a hopelessly beaten candidate in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut. He could do no better than Mr. Bryan, who has lost these states three times and would lose them again if nominated. Oscar W. Underwood is of Presidential size, but he has been untested as a candidate in the North and is an unknown quantity to most of the voters. Woodrow Wilson alone has a record of continuing victory in the section in which victory is essential to Democratic success.

What other Democratic candidate could poll so many votes in the great debatable states of the East—New York, New Jersey and Connecticut?

What other Democratic candidate, who could carry these states, would be so strong in the great debatable states of the Middle West—Ohio and Indiana?

What other Democratic candidate could make so powerful an appeal to hundreds of thousands of thoughtful independent voters without whose support no Democratic President can be elected? What other Democratic candidate could so well stem the rising tide of Rooseveltism, which now threatens to engulf representative government and republican institutions?

What other Democratic candidate would so fully measure up to the ideals of the sane radicals and the sane conservatives upon whose joint action the result of the election will hinge?

The World hitherto has withheld its active support from all candidates. It advocated an open convention at Baltimore, and advised its Democratic friends to await the action of the Republicans at Chicago. The open convention is assured. The measure of all the candidates has been taken. The situation is clarified and further delay is unnecessary.

Like the twentieth century Genghis Khan, Theodore Roosevelt, with his horde of prairie Populists and Wall Street Socialists, is sweeping down upon the Republican National Convention. Mr. Taft seems as powerless to check him as the degenerate Romans were to check the descent of the Goths and the Vandals. The historic party of Lincoln and Seward and Chase and Sumner and Conkling and Chandler and Blaine and Garfield and Harrison and Sherman and McKinley is apparently in the death throes. This is the twilight of the gods, and the Democratic party must rise not only to its opportunity but to its responsibility.

PROTECTING CUBA

Stars and Stripes Float Over Island—Troops Landed.

The Stars and Stripes are floating over Guantanamo and in a dozen small camps established in that vicinity by the 450 marines that landed on Wednesday under command of Colonel Carmody. The remainder of the force is held at the naval station in Guantanamo Bay in readiness to proceed to Santiago where trouble is expected hourly.

The Situation Alarming

So alarming is the situation in Cuba that the Fourth division of battleships, including the Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri and Ohio, have been ordered to dash from Key West to Guantanamo, the key to the affected district, with all possible speed.

The third battleship division, including the Georgia, Nebraska, New Jersey and Rhode Island, is ordered to hold itself in readiness to move at a minute's notice. The ships in this division will separate and hurry to Cuba the moment the department ascertains the points at which their presence is most urgently necessary. Orders were issued Wednesday night to all army posts in the east instructing them to be in readiness to send all their available cavalry and infantry to Cuba at a moment's notice. It is not the intention to send these troops until it is demonstrated that the situation has become such that the naval force is not sufficient to control it. In that event transports will dash for Cuba from Savannah and New York.

Four hundred and fifty marines were landed from the transport Prairie at Guantanamo and rushed to outlying positions on Cuban territory where British, French, Spanish and American property is in danger of destruction.

Frederick W. Beaupre, the American minister at Havana, has reported that the mansion of a former high government official in the province of Oriente was surrounded by negro insurgents Monday night. The official and his son were hung up by their thumbs while the negroes made an attack upon his wife and two young daughters. While the son was endeavoring to escape to protect his mother and sisters he was murdered in cold blood by the negro insurgents.

The Cuban minister, Senor Martin Rivero, called at the State Department Wednesday and informed Secretary Knox that his government would make no objection to the landing of American marines anywhere in Cuba.

At 8 o'clock this (Friday) evening Mrs. A. B. Parsels of Philadelphia will deliver a temperance address in the Methodist Church.

The temperance forces are highly favored by having in the same week two such prominent lecturers as Oliver W. Stewart and Mrs. Parsels. It is hoped that a large audience will greet this evening's lecturer. No admission charge.

The funeral services were conducted in the Riddlesburg Church of Brethren on Friday, May 24, by D. A. Stayer of Yellow Creek, assisted by H. H. Brumbaugh of Defiance, Fred Hoover of Saxton and Rev. Willard of the M. E. Church, Riddlesburg. Interment was made in the Brumbaugh Cemetery at Liberty Church.

STUDENT ORATIONS

Delivered at Commencement Exercises of the

BEDFORD HIGH SCHOOL

By Members of Class of Nineteen Hundred and Twelve, Tuesday Evening, May 28.

Following are the orations as delivered at the High School Commencement, Tuesday evening, May 28, by members of the graduating class, the salutatory and valedictory having been published last week:

The Discipline of Life and Character

By ALBERT ROY THOMAS

When we come to consider the features or elements of character, we might select one of several starting-points. We might begin with Justice, or with Good-will (love, charity), or with Courage, or with Truth. Let us begin with this fundamental quality of truthfulness. It is the condition of all moral excellence; and perhaps for this very reason it is not generally numbered among the cardinal virtues. Yet it may have been included in the virtue of wisdom or prudence, the first of the four leading virtues enumerated by Plato. However this may be, truth is fundamental. Of whatever quality we may think or speak, unless it is real, it is not good. And by this truthfulness, as indeed is already obvious, we do not mean mere veracity of speech, however valuable that may be, and even indispensable; but general truthfulness of mind, that simplicity and sincerity which gives a value to all other characteristics, and the absence of which mars every other virtue and grace.

In closest connection with truth is courage. It is indeed its surest and most necessary bulwark and defense. It is a quality to which all men are agreed to do homage. There may be men who think lightly of truthfulness, who hold that untruthfulness of speech may sometimes be necessary, and who do not attach sufficient value to truthfulness of mind. Yet we have no reason to think that, in the whole history of the world, any one has thought well of cowardice, or failed to admire courage or bravery. There is no term which we should regard as more disgraceful when applied to ourselves than the name of coward. There are few words which considerate men will hesitate so long before applying to another.

And yet our admiration of this virtue does not always insure a true judgment of its nature. Many actions which we are at first inclined to put down to courage are really cowardly actions. Many which we deem cowardly are most brave and courageous. It is not always a sign of courage to return a blow, nor to make a hot, angry retort when one is reviled. Sometimes it may need courage to do these things. More commonly it needs courage not to do them.

Few names are better known or more famous than that of Sir Philip Sidney. He was a great soldier, and distinguished himself in the wars of the Netherlands against the power of Spain. But it is not so much of his bravery as a soldier, or of his skill as a commander that we think, when we recall his courage and magnanimity; it is of his patience under insult. A fool who had quarreled with him tried to provoke him to fight. When he did not succeed, he went so far as to spit in Sidney's face. What was the hero's response? "Young man," he said, "if I could as easily wipe your blood from my conscience as I can wipe this insult from my face, I would this moment take your life." Which was the truly brave man in that case, the insolent fool or the patient hero? It is an example from which we may learn much of the nature of true courage.

This moral courage is a mighty power, because it is the symbol of truth and devotion to duty. "Conscience doth make cowards of us all." A man can hardly be courageous, in the true sense of the word, who is not animated by a high principle of action. Knox, the Scottish reformer, was harsh and intolerant, but he was a man of heroic courage. When he was laid in his grave, it could be said of him that "he never feared the face of man." It is ever so with the truest and greatest. There can be nothing great in the man who is lacking in courage.

Pre-eminent among the greater qualities of character stands justice or righteousness. It is, so to speak, the practical, the active side of truth, and is inseparable from it.

By justice we mean, first of all, the doing to others as we would that they should do to us. It means the steadfast purpose to wrong no one by thought, word or deed—in person, in possessions or in reputation. It means the willingness, the eager readiness to repair, by every means in our power, any wrong which we may, wittingly or unwittingly, have done them.

By justice we mean also devotion to duty. No man can be just who does not habitually ask what relations he sustains to God and to man, and who does not seriously consider the obligations which spring out of those relations. The neglect of duty is the robbery of humanity. It is depriving our fellow-men of that portion of work which we are morally bound to perform: not only for our own good, but also for the good of others.

Close to justice, and almost as part of it, or inseparably connected with it, stands goodness or generosity. We sometimes hear distinctions made between justice and mercy, righteousness and goodness; and there is a distinction in thought. We admit the distinction. Yet it may be doubted whether justice is ever found in men unaccompanied by mercy, whether righteousness can live without goodness for its partner. A justice which knows no mercy is the height of injustice. A mercy which takes no account of equity is apt to become unmerciful.

There is no human quality more excellent, more beautiful than generosity. In the Latin language the generous was very much what we mean by the gentleman. He was the man who was broad, liberal, sympathetic in thought, word and deed. May we not say that this is the true meaning of the word gentleman among ourselves?

What a splendid quality is this generosity of thought, of word and of deed! The quality which makes us think kindly of our fellow-men, when it is at all possible to do so, the quality which bids us assume as little as possible to ourselves and concede as much as possible to others. It is the finest quality in the most beautiful lives; and it has never been without examples in any period of human history.

It is scarcely necessary to add to these qualities the radical virtue of unselfishness; for this is but the negative aspect of that quality which is universally regarded as the root of all goodness—whether we call it love, benevolence or good-will. Of this quality selfishness is the antagonist, and the parent of falsehood, cowardice, injustice, intemperance and unkindness. That which we chiefly admire in those good qualities which we have mentioned is the unselfishness, the self-denial which enters into them. Wherever there is love there is sacrifice; there can be no real, deep good-will which does not express itself in acts of self-abnegation. Some of the most beautiful incidents in human history are illustrations of this principle. We need only refer to King David refusing the water of the well of Bethlehem, and Sir Philip Sidney passing on the draught of water to the wounded soldier.

The Twentieth Century Man

By DURBIN H. STEINER

In all ages when issues of paramount importance to the public weal are to be considered the question arises, who is the man for the times to lead the various forces to victory? and invariably the answer comes, the man of strong intellect, the man of unimpeachable character, the man having at heart the greatest good to the greatest number.

Every man has his hour of opportunity and the youth who, in preparing for his life-work, senses the signs of the times and forges ahead to the completion of a well-rounded character, is the man of the hour.

Heroes are not alone those chosen for leadership, however, for how much the world is indebted to the rank and file for moral victory won the day of final account alone will reveal.

Standing as we do in the morning of the twentieth century, it is fitting that in contrast we consider present-day advantages over those of the past. Granting much truth in the statement that there is nothing new under the sun, yet there has never been such an unfolding of the forces of nature and the discovery of new inventions of thought and genius as the twentieth century affords.

Along educational lines the progress has been remarkably great. The land is becoming honey-combed with colleges, and institutions of learning which are open to every boy eager and willing to take advantage of them. The opportunities these institutions afford are most important giving the young man traits of character which are of every day use in later life. The physical as well as the mental side is also developed. Athletics are now being made one of the most important divisions of college life. The students are by these means fitted out for taking up the battle of life with a strong body as well as a clear, well-trained mind.

In every-day life as well as in schools, character is developed. Just as pure water cannot be obtained from an impure stream so the man who associates himself with the wrong companions cannot expect to rise above them.

The industrial world is surprising in its activities while the social, political, and religious functions are so revolutionizing society as that the nations are fast becoming one in thought and practice and the world uplifted in its moral tone.

How was it in the past? Take Rome and Greece with all their boasted culture—cruel in their practices, blood-thirsty in the treatment of their subjects. Spain at the height of her power—ruled by the iron hand of the inquisition, the tyrannical laws set down by her rulers, and the heavy taxes and duties placed upon the ignorant populace by their oppressors and owners—the nobility.

Likewise in ages past England, France and other nations have undergone such rule, but step by step as time has past leaders of thought have begun to realize their wrongs and sought ways and means by which they could successfully contend against them and better their own conditions as well as those of the men around them. And now we may look back to those men who have struggled through innumerable hardships to win that which we now enjoy.

Still there is much to be done by the man of today, and it should be the ambition of each to be a leader among his fellowmen to help them to obtain that which would be of the highest good to the masses and to help his country, whichever it may be, to take a higher place among the nations of the world.

To do these things, we should show not only in great crisis but in the every-day affairs of life, the qualities of courage, self-reliance, practical intelligence, endurance, and above all the devotion to a lofty ideal, such as those which made famous the men who founded and preserved this great nation of ours.

The man of today has before him a greater opportunity than that of any past time. He is associated with people who are willing to recognize his abilities and give him a fair chance to make good.

Take our own government for example along presidential aspirations. The same chance is given to those from the humblest walks of life to become the first man of the nation, and fortunate is he who, seeing his day of opportunity, makes the most of himself through application and faithfulness in the little things until made ruler of many.

The twentieth century man to be a man of the times must be equal to the emergencies of life, alert to business projects, not crafty but remembering that honesty is to be considered before policy. He must be what he seems, self-reliant but not self-opinionated, conscious of his ability but not overestimating himself, willing to receive as well as give counsel. A man of high ideals, moving with reforms in the interest of humanity and the advance of civilization. Striking examples of such reformers are found in John B. Gough, Lincoln, Gladstone, Francis E. Willard and a multitude of uncrowned heroes who have left the world richer for their having lived.

No nation is stronger than its individual citizenship but is solely dependent on the man of strong moral integrity to win for it a place as leader among nations aggressive in reform movements. The present is the history-making period of tomorrow. Indeed today is tomorrow because it followed yesterday. Today is the trial of man's fortitude. The crisis or man's destiny is now. Our cares are all today, our joys are all today, and in one little word—OUR LIFE—twentieth century man, what is it but today?

The Golden Thread

By MISS JESSIE EVANS

Standing upon the high pinnacle of the twentieth century, we gaze over the ruins of many once powerful and glorious nations, wondering how nations so grand and illustrious can at last have succumbed and have tasted of death. With our eyes straining to the very horizon of the ages, far out into the mists of time, gleaming through its certainty, we catch a glimmer of a golden thread.

This thread was spun and woven in the beginning at the creation. It has survived the flight of ages, for it is the glistening messenger of God. In Biblical history we ever see this messenger of the great Jehovah trailing its way, sometimes lost in the confusion of mighty rush of affairs; yet beneath the obscurity, always flashing into brilliancy at the most opportune time, and twining itself around that part of a nation's qualities, which are good and deserving, carrying them with it to a new field.

Pessimists have regarded history as a continuous repetition of nations rising to glory then sinking into the nothingness from which they seemed to have sprung, with nothing left behind, and with no good accomplished. Such is the sentiment of Lord Byron: "This is the moral of all human taste, 'Tis but the same rehearsal of the past.

First freedom, then glory, wealth, Vice, corruption, barbarism at last. And history with all its volumes vast, Hath but one page.

But what of our golden thread? Surely it is not in vain that its fabric has been so patiently woven from its earliest dawn even to our own day. Surely there is a purpose, and nations have not struggled and lived for naught.

When the curtain of this great world drama was first lifted thousands of dark skinned men were toiling in the beautiful, fruitful valley of the Nile. Already they had erected their magnificent monuments; already they had thrown off the bondage of savagery. We see them steadily growing in might, the greatest people of their time, giving untutored nations around them their first conception of sculpture, arts, geometry, medicine and astronomy. Were those long days of patient building and the nights given over to the study of the mysterious course of the stars spent uselessly?

The Light of Egypt slowly faded, and farther to the north in the valley of the Euphrates the golden thread again appeared. A people for years busy with terrible wars and foreign conquests turn at last to the joyful pursuits of peace. They construct a network of canals over the fertile fields. Huge palaces are adorned with the winged gods; and Babylon, the magnificent, has sprung into power. Enlarging upon the legacy of Egypt she dominates the world in art, in science and in law.

Away from the oriental splendor and magnificence of this vast world empire under the blue skies of sunny Greece, a youthful, energetic race of men were working out their destiny. They were the children of promise living in the beautiful fancies of their own creations and bringing these fancies to a well-nigh perfect reality. They peopled their forests, streams and air with wonderful beings who lived in their poetry and sculpture as well. The golden thread passing the luxury-loving, degenerated Babylon shines with its most glorious splendor for the first time in Europe.

Babylon fell because she could not preserve the high ideals essential to true glory. Greece combined great

Helped to Keep Down Expenses

Mrs. J. E. Henry, Akron, Mich., tells how she did so: "I was bothered with my kidneys and had to go nearly double. I tried a sample of Foley Kidney Pills and they did me so much good that I bought a bottle, and feel that they saved me a big doctor's bill." E. D. Heckerman.

beauty both of mind and form. There has probably been no more ingenious people than the ancient Greeks and for perfect ideals we owe them almost everything. Though now only a memory the Greek world, still in many ways, moulding the thought and action of the present. Then what brought about her downfall? Just as in the case of her predecessors she became too confident, too careless and behold the golden thread was removed from her, taking her best and giving it to a sturdy race across the Adriatic.

This vigorous people had already begun to rear on the banks of the muddy Tiber, the lofty walls of Rome, soon to be the mistress of the world. They pushed their conquering armies beyond the Alps, over the Rhine, and the Roman eagle soon held sway from northern Africa even to the shores of barbarous Briton. This, the greatest of ancient empires, reached the zenith of its power, and for the first time in centuries universal peace existed. Then it was that the golden thread gleamed most brightly, though few there were whose eyes were not blinded and who saw it in its real significance, for in a little Judean village was born the Prince of Peace, the guardian of our golden thread.

Rome gave many things to the world. Contrasted with Greece she was eminently practical and laid the foundation for all our modern sciences. Yet her greatest gift was an unconscious one—the preparation of the world for the reception of Christianity.

The Caesars lived and died in their magnificence and Roman ideals once so stern and lofty became corrupt. Darkness settled over the earth and for a time the golden thread seems to have completely disappeared, while cultured Roman and rough barbarian alike wandered through the blood-stained centuries of the Dark Ages. When the gloom is finally dispelled and we see its faint glimmer in the northern forests of the fierce Teutonic warriors who were our own ancestors. In them were qualities superior to the southern races, for they were endowed with a strength sufficient to resist weakening influences and develop the best and highest in human nature. From such a source sprang the nations of modern Europe, combining the learning and beauty of Greece, the practical science of Rome with the moral strength of the northern tribes.

The modern era has seen one absolute monarchy after another perish, and the people often painfully and slowly, yet none the less steadily, working their way toward freedom. It has seen a band of stern and steadfast men cross the unknown ocean and build rude homes on a wintry shore. It has seen the struggle of a little group of colonies and their final triumph and has watched their rapid advance to glory and fame.

We of the United States should certainly have faith in the golden thread, for it has shown for us always; at no time have we had cause to regret our motto: "In God We Trust." Certainly more than any other nation have we a right to be proud of our advancement, our wealth, or statesmen, or inventors or thinkers, Americans old and young.

We likewise believe we have not yet reached our zenith, that greater achievements are before us, that the future shall be, must be, greater than the present or the past. Yet we stand at a critical point in our history, as we look back over the ages and see how many a powerful nation rose and fell leaving us its best and warning us of its evils. We have taken our legacy and royally have we used it. Shall we not also take the warning? Other nations failed to hold to their high ideals and having lost them ruin came because the golden thread could no longer remain with them. Let us then push ever onward, higher and higher, toward the ideals above us, remembering the golden thread is twined about each nation's life as well as our own lives and that there is a destiny which shapes our ends rough hew them though we may.

The Usurpation of the Judiciary

By RAY M. PLANK

The nation now known as the United States was made by a voluntary combination of the thirteen original colonies in 1787, 1788, 1789 and 1790. The powers of the government were conferred and the organs for their betterment selected by the state. The instrument which records this creative intention is known as the Constitution of the United States. If we want to find what powers the congress, the courts, the executive have we must search this document.

The Constitution made by the people provided for a government which was to consist of three distinctive powers, namely: The legislative power, which makes the laws; the executive power, whose duty is to carry out the laws, and the judicial power which interprets the laws and applies them to individual cases.

The judicial power is in the hands of the Supreme Court in Washington and of the inferior court established in all the states and territories of our great nation.

The Supreme Court is composed of nine justices whose work is almost entirely confined in deciding points of law in connection with important civil cases which have been appealed to them by the lower courts.

A decision of the Supreme Court is final and must be obeyed. No other court in the world has such great power and this power has, in some cases, been unwisely used. Hence we see that all the justice and freedom of our country is undoubtedly in the hands of the great Supreme Court, but under them we must not overlook the inferior court whose duty it is to also administer justice to our citizens.

Over them we have judges who are chosen by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. When appointed to such an office the judges shall swear or affirm that they shall support the Constitution of the United States. Their power is also limited. Their judicial authority shall extend to all cases of law and equity; arising, under the Constitution

DOUBLY PROVEN

Gazette Readers Can No Longer Doubt the Evidence.

This grateful citizen testified long ago. Told of quick relief—of undoubted benefit.

The facts are now confirmed. Such testimony is complete—the evidence conclusive.

It forms convincing proof of merit. Mrs. W. H. Weller, Clarence St., Hyndman, Pa.; says: "I had nearly all the symptoms that accompany a bad case of kidney complaint. My back ached constantly and I was often tired and dizzy. When a friend recommended Doan's Kidney Pills to me, I commenced their use and it required the contents of only two boxes to effect a cure. I am now in good health and I have every reason to believe that Doan's Kidney Pills have effected a permanent cure." (Statement given October 12, 1907.)

Confirmed Proof

Mrs. Weller was interviewed again some time ago and she said: "The relief Doan's Kidney Pills gave me has been permanent. I willingly confirm all I have previously said in praise of this preparation."

of the United States, under the laws of the United States and under treaties made or which shall be made under their authority.

Many years have passed since the framing of the Constitutions and since that time the Federal Courts have arrogated to themselves power which the Constitution never intended for them.

Until the legislative organ regains its legislative supremacy the intentions of the enactors of the Constitution are defeated and the people's will is thwarted by what five men out of one hundred million choose to declare the will of those who have been dead for one hundred and twenty-five years.

Shall we stand back and see these courts which stand for freedom, justice and liberty, unjustly take measures which were never intended for them? Never! Should such unconstitutional powers be allowed?

The judges, it is true, tell us that an unconstitutional law, that is a law the enactment of which they conceive to be beyond congressional and presidential power is not a law. It confers no rights; it imposes no duties; it affords no protection; it creates no office. It is in legal contemplation as though it had never been seen or heard of.

The inactiveness of a statute means the failure of the legislative body of the people to aid the executive and judicial agents in the enforcement of the will of the people.

It is evident that the courts are exercising a veto power. Where did they get it?

One veto power is provided for in the Constitution, and that is the President's. This instrument is silent to others.

How shall we interpret this silence on the part of the people? That judges should annul statutes was almost unheard of when our Constitution was framed.

Executive veto was well known in England although it had not been exercised for more than a half a century, but a judicial veto was out of the question.

If the power to annul statutes would have been intended for courts would not this have been provided for in the Constitution?

Back in Madison's administration we have several judges who refused to carry out a statute. This act awakened great reprobation and the judges were immediately impeached and removed from office. But today nothing prevents them from carrying out their motives. They are unmo-lested.

We must then conclude that since the Constitution drawn up by the convention contains no reference to a veto power for the judges that no such power was conferred.

It is necessary to complete the work of due co-ordination of the various arms of the government by the abandonment by the judges of the usurp power of paralyzing the legislative organ by refusing to carry out its legislation, and by enjoining officers and others from carrying out that legislation.

The legislators are elected to speak and usually speak the people's will. The people will never be masters of their own house so long as the majority of nine gentlemen, pretending to have marconigrams from the deceased men of 1787 and 1788 concerning their meaning when they adopted this or that phrase of the Constitution, arrogate to themselves the power of veto and not merely refuse in the enforcement of statutes, but even launch prohibitions against (Continued on Third Page.)

60 Ann St., New York City. Dear Sir: I have known for over 40 years of the effects of Wilson's Remedy (Wilson's Preparation of Hyposphosphites and Bismuth) in cases of pulmonary troubles. At this point I will say to you what you have not before known of; that 40 years since, while I was a resident of N. Y. City, I was severely ill with lung trouble. Physicians said I was consumptive and my family physician told my wife that he thought I could not recover. My attention was directed to the Wilson Remedy, which I used with splendid effect. I have been on my feet and at work ever since my cure. Yours truly, REV. CHAS. SAGER.

Mark Antony

By RAYMOND BURKE

The modern process of varnishing over wicked characters of the past cannot be successfully applied to Mary Antony. The morals of this prince of revellers are not to be defended. But it is not from the lives of saints alone that profit is derived. Men need warnings as well as models. And the career of Antony, notwithstanding its great errors, is most valuable as a lesson for this reason: he was great in spite of and not through his faults; the results of his good and bad qualities are kept distinct, the former bringing fame, and the latter ruin.

A fitting inscription for Antony's tomb might be "Power undermined and destroyed by lack of self-control." Antony was a power. He ruled his fellows through a nature-granted sovereignty. He was master of the arts by which the will of man is subdued and led. Words were not the least effective weapons in his arsenal. He was a natural orator. He produced no carefully elaborated essays, models of structure and polish to be admired by the scholar in his closet and parsed by the student in the classroom. But he hurried living, burning words at his hearers, irresistibly moving their passions. The most important battle, and the one we know most about, won by his tongue was fought over the dead body of Caesar. Imagine the scene that Shakespeare suggests. Brutus has just finished his speech, and the Roman mob is filled with sympathy for the conspirators and a mighty hatred toward Caesar. Hardly can they be persuaded to remain and hear the funeral oration. In the midst of the tumult Antony appears before them. His tall and powerful frame is slightly bowed and his face is touched with sadness, his expressive eyes are mist. He sees below and around him the surging mob of Rome. All faces are suspicious and threatening. He hears the hoarse mutterings of the swaying crowd, "This Caesar was a tyrant." "We are blessed that Rome is rid of him." Gradually the murmurs are hushed. The dignified sorrow of the orator awes them and weighs upon them. Antony's opening words fall gently on their ears—words that rob the Hybla bees and leave them honeyless—charm away their prejudice. As the orator proceeds, pity expels envy, pity for him whom they once loved, once so powerful, now dead, "with none so poor to do him reverence."

He excites their gratitude by a reference to Caesar's will; he plays upon their gentler passions until he sees that their sympathy with him is complete and they will follow where he leads. Now he descends into their midst. He gathers them about the corpse of the murdered emperor. He arouses the old Roman war-spirit by thrilling them with the recital of Caesar's victories. He points out the wounds made by each dagger in Caesar's mantle, and denounces in impassioned terms the base ingratitude of Brutus. He denounces with bitter sarcasm the "honorable men" whose daggers have stabbed Caesar. His hearers respond to every appeal. Now their faces flame with fury, now their eyes fill with tears. "You weep," said he, "at Caesar's vesture wounded, but here is himself mangled, as you see, by traitors." Then was the crowd fairly inflamed. "Burn, fire, kill, slay, let not a traitor live" burst from every lip and off they rush to destroy those whose warmest partisans they had so lately been. What a power lay coiled up in this man's brain! At his words the stones of Rome did "rise and mutiny." Brutus was overthrown and Antony's dominion became supreme.

He was also a mighty soldier. Egypt and Syria first learned to tremble at his name. Again and again, though opposed by supreme forces, his skillful tactics and cunning strategy gained him the victory. After uniform and remarkable success in the East he joined Caesar in Gaul and was considered by that leader his ablest general. At Pharsalia he looms up as the commander of the victorious left wing who helped turn the doubtful tide of battle in Caesar's favor. And, after Caesar had fallen, pierced by many daggers, and when the crowning conflict with the conspirators took place, it was his bravery and his skill that crushed "the lean and wrinkled Cassius" and "the mad Brutus ended." But pain and misery and misfortune were necessary to develop all his resources. Only the hottest crucible could free him from his impurities and bring out the gleam of the true metal. In times of suffering and extreme hazard he seemed almost to mould circumstances. No difficulty overcame him, no distress or danger weakened his sway of men and fate, no perilous emergency found him unprepared.

After his defeat at Mutina he fled from Italy with his scattered forces. Famine and disease overtook the army in its flight. Though "daintily brought up," this gay and reckless reveler endured the most terrible privations patiently and almost cheerfully. He became a companion to his men, lived in their tents, shared their sorrows and in turn was held by them in almost idolatrous affection. After a march, whose horrors no words can paint, in which the army ate the very bark off the trees and drank from "the gilded puddle that beasts would cough at," Antony led his ragged and starving troops down the Alps to the camp of Lepidus, coldly treated by this general, his honeyed tongue so won the soldiery that Lepidus found himself losing his army; and in a short time Antony passed in great strength over the Alps, which he lately crossed, beaten and a fugitive. Once, later in life, he broke from his revels and invaded Parthia. Compelled at last to retreat by the climate, by famine, by lack of water, he brought off his army in safety, making nothing of suffering, disease, and the innumerable hordes opposing him, and astonishing the world by the display of every quality that distinguishes a great and successful general.

But nature does not strain her gifts through a sieve. Good and bad are cast out together from the urn. In the web of Antony's character strong and weak threads are interwoven inseparably. His achievements as a reveler also had their climax. In Cleopatra, "the rare Egyptian," "the serpent of old Nile," fierce, tender, passionate, beautiful, "full of poisonous and rapturous enchantment," he found a congenial spirit. Antony was ensnared; he, "who with half the bulk of the world, played as he pleased," was, like Samson, through a woman's arts, shorn of strength and energy. The rest of his life is like a wild dream. Self-control is thrown to the winds. This drama finds its catastrophe at Actum, where the East and the West met in decisive conflict, where Octavian, the crafty schemer and this reckless voluptuary joined in battle. History records how Cleopatra insisted on fighting by sea against the better judgment of Antony and his generals, and then, when the battle was at its height, fled with her ships; how Antony played the madman and sailed after her, leaving those who were risking their lives for him, to their fate without a leader; how he betook himself again to his revels abandoning an army, with which ten years before, he could have conquered the world; and how at last, on the approach of Augustus, deserted by the Egyptians and believing Cleopatra dead, he perished by his own hand.

What a satire on human frailty is the story of his life! A mighty ruler who neglected to govern his passions, a monarch and a slave! Self-control is the lesson to be learned. Men were as playthings in this giant's hands; he subdued them by power of will, or persuaded them by magic of his voice, or crushed them by force of arms; but his own spirit he ruled not, and his life was a failure, his name a blot on history; and the world may point to Mark Antony, the orator, the soldier, and the reveler as one who conquered all things else, but missed the prize because he himself he failed to conquer.

Mrs. Lela Love, wife of Wiley Love, a farmer living near Cove, Ga., says: "I have taken Foley Kidney Pills and find them to be all you claim for them. They gave me almost instant relief when my kidneys were sluggish and inactive. I can cheerfully recommend them to all sufferers from kidney troubles." E. D. Heckerman.

How can it do its duty better than to match sanity against lunacy; statesmanship against demagoguery; the historian against the Rough Rider; the educator of public opinion against the debaucher of public opinion; the first term against the third term; the tariff-reformer against the stand-patter; the man who would prosecute trust magnates against the man who protects trust magnates; the man with clean hands against the man who draws his campaign fund from Wall Street; the supporter of constitutional government against the champion of personal government; law against lawlessness; Americanism against Mexicanism; the Republic against the dictatorship?

Who better represents these issues than Woodrow Wilson? Who is better qualified than Woodrow Wilson to appeal to the intelligence and common sense of the American people against the most cunning and adroit demagogue that modern civilization has produced since Napoleon III?

Who would stand a better chance of election in this great national crisis?

Let us look at the facts: It will require 266 electoral votes to elect a President. The so-called Southern States, including Maryland and Missouri, have 175 votes. Assuming that Arizona will go Democratic too, practically any Democratic candidate for President can count on 178 electoral votes. But 88 more are necessary to victory. Where can these 88 be found?

It is folly to look for them west of the Mississippi River. The West is in the midst of another revival of Populism. In Theodore Roosevelt it has found a new substitute for its gospel of free silver. He is the political reincarnation of James B. Weaver, Mary E. Lease, Jerry Simpson and Peffer. He is the heaven-born ratio of 16 to 1 in a still more fascinating form. It is idle to think that any Democrat could appeal to the West against Roosevelt. It is idle to think that anybody who is not a far more masterful and dangerous demagogue than Roosevelt could command the support of the Populists who now call themselves Republican Progressives.

The Democratic party, if it is to win the election and safeguard American institutions, must unite the East and the South as Tilden did in 1876. The candidate must carry New York with its 45 electoral votes. He must carry New Jersey with its 14 electoral votes. He must carry Connecticut with its seven electoral votes. To lose these states is to give Roosevelt a walkover. To win these states is to win not only 66 of the 88 electoral votes that are needed, but in all probability it is to win Ohio with 24 votes; it is to win Indiana with 15 votes, which is the historical political ally of New York and New Jersey; it is to give the Democratic party an opportunity of victory in Massachusetts with its 13 votes, and to bring Delaware with its three votes back into the Democratic column. In other words, it is to elect a Democratic President of the United States.

It is in the East that Democratic victory must be won. It is in the East that Rooseveltism must be overthrown. It is the East that must save the country from a third term and all it implies. For that reason The World regards Woodrow Wilson as the strongest candidate the Democratic party can nominate.

The New Jersey primaries were a vital test of his political strength not only in New Jersey but in New York. They proved that local opposition to him is largely a myth. Although the campaign against him was well organized and abundantly financed, it failed miserably. He swept the state, and the only four delegates he lost were lost through the personal efforts of James Smith, Jr., a political boss whom Governor Wilson kept out of the United States Senate. In a section of the country where Wall Street and the political bosses are most powerful, Governor Wilson demonstrated that he has the confidence of the rank and file of the party, without which any man's candidacy is futile. He demonstrated as well that his political strength is the kind of strength that is essential to Democratic success in the vitally necessary States of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut.

So much for that. During Governor Wilson's public career The World has been compelled to take issue with him on many questions. We regarded with grave misgivings his sudden conversion to the initiative and referendum, reversing the principles of a lifetime. We regretted his apparent disposition to imitate Mr. Bryan's sweeping charges against the so-called Money Trust without supporting these charges with facts and specifications. We regretted his long campaign tours, his too eager chase after the nomination, and certain symptoms of instability which threatened to weaken his public usefulness. We have not hesitated to warn him when we thought he was going astray, and shall not hesitate to do so again in the future.

But Governor Wilson's elements of weakness are vastly overbalanced by his elements of strength. He has proved his political courage and his fearlessness. He has proved himself sound on tariff reform. He has proved himself sound on the Sherman law. He has proved himself sound on corporation control. He has proved himself sound on trust prosecutions and personal guilt. He has proved himself sound against government by Wall Street plutocracy. He has proved himself sound on the independence of the judiciary. He has proved himself sound on the fundamental principles of constitutional government. He has proved that he is instinctively and temperamentally a Democrat. He has proved himself a free man who cannot be bulldozed by bosses or influenced against his convictions even by his personal friends. That is the sort of man who ought to be President.

Governor Wilson has had more public experience than Grover Cleveland had when he was elected President. He is better known to the rank and file of the party than Samuel J. Tilden was when he was nominated for President. The World believes that he would be a progressive constitutional President whom the American people could trust and for whom they would never have cause to apologize.

We appeal to all Democrats to consider this matter soberly and thoughtfully and without prejudice. We appeal to the delegates to the Democratic National Convention to be swayed by no considerations except those of principle and the public welfare. We appeal to Mr. Bryan to throw his great political influence upon the side of Governor Wilson and aid the Democratic party to meet adequately this great crisis in the Nation's history. He has the most brilliant opportunity for disinterested, patriotic leadership that has come to any American of this generation, and he has before him in Theodore Roosevelt a striking example of the meaning of ruthless and unyielding ambition.

It is not in behalf of Woodrow Wilson that The World urges his nomination. It is not merely in behalf of the Democratic party as a party. It is in behalf of the American people. It is in behalf of American institutions. It is in behalf of the Republic. It is in behalf of the Nation that is now confronted with the gravest menace that it has faced since the obliteration of human slavery and the overthrow of secession.

Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA

A Story of the Galveston Flood

The Trial by Water, the narrative of a personal experience during the great Galveston flood, is thrillingly described in the June issue of Sports Afield. An account of a famous Maine shooting ground is followed by Birch Creek's Big Trout; after which we note a capital article on The Sport of Trap Shooting, with some early day reminiscences. At the Edge of the Cloud (Mr. Barnes' story of frontier life during the Civil War) increases steadily in interest—amply warranting the cordial welcome accorded it in all parts of the country. White Bass Fishing in Wisconsin, Our Trip to Half-way River, Trout Fishing in Canada, The Best Gun for Upland Sport, Game Conditions in Pennsylvania, and a strong editorial against our nefarious enemy the cat, are some of the especially good articles in the June Sports Afield. Your newsdealer can supply you; if not, send 15 cents to Sports Afield, 542 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

Monarch's Fine Library.

The library of Philip the Good of Burgundy, in the fifteenth century, surpassed all other European book collections of the time. It contained nearly 10,000 volumes, all richly illuminated on vellum, with bindings of damask satin and velvet incrustured by jewels, with clasps of gold and gems. Bruges, where the ducal court was held, was filled with literary craftsmen, and certain of their splendid productions are still to be seen in the Belgian royal library.

Cow Wrought Much Mischief.

A series of accidents all on account of a cow occurred one day not long ago at Neerim, South Victoria. A man who was driving a gig was upset by running over a cow. The pony then bolted with the upturned gig, which frightened a team of horses attached to a wagon, and the latter capsize over a log, plowing underneath it the driver, who sustained a fracture of the skull.

"Suffered day and night the torment of itching piles. Nothing helped me until I used Doan's Ointment. The result was lasting."—Hon. John R. Garrett, Mayor, Girard, Ala.

Careless.

At the mixed court recently a charge of arson was preferred against a shopkeeper whose premises are situated in Woosung road. After evidence had been adduced the accused was discharged, says the North China Daily News. His assistant, who was also before the court, received six weeks' imprisonment for carelessness in connection with the outbreak.

Raft of Cocoanuts.

In the Philippine islands one frequently sees a raft of cocoanuts being floated down the river to market. The buoyant nuts are closely packed into a circle, braced across with bamboos, and tied with fiber; and the queer craft, with its native paddler, is then ready for the trip down stream to a point where the raft will be broken up and the cocoanuts sold.—Wide World Magazine.

THE COMING CONVENTIONS

The time between now and the meeting of the two conventions, one of which will nominate Theodore Roosevelt or William Howard Taft as the candidate of the Republican party for President of the United States and the other name the next President of the Republic, is not distant. The primary in South Dakota, which gave the Colonel 10 delegates and favored Wilson by a narrow margin, practically completed the selection of delegates to the two conventions. Already the preliminaries are being arranged and the temporary officers decided upon.

That the Chicago convention will either name the President or the Ex-President is practically certain for there are but two candidates who are considered in the running and with the delegates, for the most part, pledged to one or the other of them, it is hardly possible that a sufficient number will desert them to give a third man a majority of the convention. This condition, together with the "majority rule" of the party makes impossible any nomination other than Taft or Roosevelt unless one of them should withdraw his name, which is not at all likely, though possible.

It is almost as certain that the nominee of the Chicago convention will be defeated in November as it is that one of the two named will be the nominee. The admirers of Taft by the thousands would refuse to vote for Roosevelt because their leader has declared him unfit and unsafe and ungrateful. For the same reason, should Mr. Taft be nominated, the followers of the Colonel would refuse to support him.

Again, thousands of independents would refuse to vote for either, assuming that at least a part of what each has said of the other during the disgraceful campaign is true; for if but half of the utterances of either are founded on fact, the other is not fitted for the high office.

For bitterness the battle between the two has no parallel in American politics, and the November election will not see the chasm bridged.

From the bitterness that has characterized the Roosevelt-Taft fight the campaign for the Democratic nomination has been free. There have been, it is true, harsh things said by campaign managers and orators against Democratic aspirants, but they do not compare with the utterances in the canvass of the Republican aspirants; they have not been of such a nature as to split the party in twain; there is no likelihood of any one of them running independent should he fail to secure the nomination.

tion. Not so with the Republican candidates.

A careful survey of the field indicates that Mr. Taft will be nominated at Chicago unless the Southern delegates desert him, and many are those who feel sure, in case of his nomination, that Colonel Roosevelt will lead a third party to the polls in November.

The 18 votes gained by Jersey's Governor in Louisiana and South Dakota add strength to the candidacy of Wilson, and the declaration of the New York World and other papers of an independent nature also augment his chances in that they will have a powerful influence upon uninstructed delegations. The World's announcement in his favor, giving reasons for its declaration (published in full in this issue of The Gazette), is a masterful argument in his favor, and its influence will be felt at the Baltimore convention and at the polling places in November.

Wilson's nomination would mean his election and his election would carry with it a Democratic House of Representatives; the Speaker of that House would likely be Hon. Champ Clark and the Floor Leadership would most probably again fall upon Hon. Oscar W. Underwood—which would make a working team of ability and efficiency and the Democratic party and the Nation would be proud of their achievements.

Memorial Day at Pleasantville

Through the united and untiring efforts of the members of the Pleasantville Cornet Band, Pleasantville had one of the largest and best ordered celebrations of her existence. Less than one-sixth the money necessary for expenses was subscribed by the business people and other citizens. Through their own efforts, the band boys procured amusements and arranged for the exercises and parade.

At 1:30 the parade formed as follows: Grand Marshal, W. R. Smith; Aide, H. A. Statler; Pleasantville Cornet Band, 100 children carrying flowers and flags, then carriages conveying the old soldiers, New Paris Band and secret societies. Prof. Holtsopple of Juniata College, Huntingdon, made the address of the day.

After the Memorial service was concluded a baseball game was called, Windber and Pleasantville being the contestants. After a hard-fought game Pleasantville lung Windber's scalp to her belt, score 7-8. A festival and cake-walk at night concluded the day's festivities.

Walnut Grove Campmeeting

The Walnut Grove Campmeeting Association met last Tuesday and decided to hold camp August 9-18. The ground is in excellent condition and the demand for tents large. The boarding house will open early, rates same as last year. Former difficulties have all been adjusted and everything indicates a large and prosperous camp. Accommodations will be furnished for the public who desire to attend a religious service but everything possible will be done to preserve order. Every person who secures lodging must register and pay before entering a room and the association reserves the right to refuse lodging and to cancel agreements to furnish accommodations for cause.

The meeting of the association was very harmonious. E. E. Ramsey, on elder of the Church of God at Walnut Grove, and Rev. H. I. Carmichael, pastor of that church, met with the association. A committee consisting of Revs. McGuire and Carmichael and Messrs. E. E. Ramsey, Naam Locke and David Ashton were appointed to have charge of the spiritual and financial part of the camp. Rev. Carmichael and Miss Bertha Locke will have charge of the music. Same book that was used last year will be used this year in singing.

Rev. F. W. McGuire of Saxton, who has had charge of the camp for the past five years, will have complete charge of renting tents, rooms and all other privileges this year. He will gladly furnish information to those desiring it.

Not Paint

The worst mistake in painting is not putting-off. That costs about 10 percent; you keep your money a year and pay 10 percent for it.

Paint would have to come-down 25 percent to make 10 percent on the job, for wages do not go down.

The worst mistake is "cheap" paint. It costs from 50 percent to 100, first cost, and another in wear.

What a liar "cheap" is! "Put-off" is bed-enough; "cheap" is ten times worse.

BEDFORD TEAM DEFEATED

By the Altoona Field Club at North Side Park on Decoration Day.

Last Thursday, Decoration Day, Bedford opened the baseball season at North Side Park with a game with the Altoona Field Club and were defeated by the score of 6 to 0. Baylor, Bedford's pitcher, pitched an excellent game, having 14 strikeouts to his credit, but he did not have the proper support back of him. The Bedford boys were weak at the bat and when they did hit the ball it usually went right into an Altoona fielder's hands. Neither side scored until the fourth inning when several errors were made by the Bedford boys which allowed first and second bases to be occupied by Altoona runners; at this critical stage Bock of Altoona knocked the ball over the left field fence for a home run and scored three runs. This was the longest hit ever made on the grounds at North Side Park.

Black, for Altoona, pitched a good game and led both teams at the bat, having a two-base hit and two singles to his credit. He had 13 strikeouts and gave but two bases on balls. The score follows:

PAPER BAG COOKING

Great System Perfected by M. Sover, Famous London Chef.

NOURISHING BEEF DISHES.

By Martha McCulloch Williams.
I wonder how many careful house-mothers know stuffed roast beef? To make it get two flank steaks of generous size, sew them together with clean strong cotton and stuff bag thus formed in any way you like. Tie up the steaks. Butter them well over the outside. Slip into a well buttered paper bag plenty large enough to hold them, add a tablespoonful of water, cook in a hot oven three minutes, then turn off the heat more than half and cook for forty minutes more. Very heavy steaks may take longer, and light ones a shorter time. Sliced onions laid around the steak will flavor the meat and the gravy. This dish can be left standing in the bag quite a while after cooking. Heating it up makes it as good as ever.

Take four pounds of round beef—the best cut. Rub over liberally with butter or clarified drippings, but do not salt, and put into a bag, which has been thickly buttered, along with half a can of tomatoes or three large fresh ones, peeled and chopped, one minced onion, one small red pepper, three cloves and six grains of allspice. Score the beef lightly on top so as to press the spices into it. Cover it with the tomatoes, onion, etc., and lay on them a lump of butter or dripping rolled in salted flour. Add a tablespoonful of vinegar and water mixed. Seal bag tight, and cook very slowly for three hours. A gas jet turned half down gives about the right heat. Take from the bag, pour out the gravy—in a saucepan if you want it thickened with browned flour; otherwise, in the boat. The meat will be very tender and delicious.

Yorkshire pudding does not absolutely demand cooking underneath a roast. To go with this round roast, you can make it thus. Beat two eggs separately very light, then add to them alternately a cup of sweet milk and two cups of flour, sifted with half a teaspoonful salt, and a teaspoonful baking powder. Mix smoothly, pour into a very well greased bag, seal, allowing room for rising, lay flat on a wire mat and cook for twenty-five minutes in a fairly hot oven.

Meat roll is a good end for cold lean roast beef. Mince or grind it fine, season with salt, pepper, tiny bits of butter, a little lemon juice and a pinch of powdered herbs. Roll out puff paste to less than a quarter inch thickness. Make it in long strips. Spread the meat thinly upon them, roll up, pinch the ends together tight, put in a buttered bag with a little stock or water or left over gravy, also a small lump of butter, seal and cook till the pastry is brown—the time depending somewhat on the size and number of the rolls.

A PAPER BAG DINNER.

By Nicolas Soyer, Chef of Brooks' Club, London.

Duckling with Turnips: Thoroughly butter a paper bag, place the duckling inside, cut a few slices of carrot and turnip into fancy shapes, cut up a few blanched spring onions, and add a bouquet garni. Pour in three tablespoonfuls of tomato sauce and a wineglassful of Madeira. Season with salt and pepper according to taste. Cook for forty-five to fifty-five minutes, according to the size of the bird.

Chicken a la Reine: Take a fowl trussed as for boiling, and rub it well over with a split onion. Place it in a well-greased bag and add to it a gill of good stock. Add also a sprig of parsley, a bay leaf, a sprig of sweet herbs, and, if obtainable, two or three spring onions, all tied together. Take four ounces of well-cooked rice and add it to the fowl. Place the bag on the broiler, simmer very slowly in a moderate oven until the fowl is cooked, then dish up the fowl on a hot dish, remove the herbs and empty the rice into a fresh bag. Add to it a tablespoonful of stock, a gill of cream, a little grated lemon peel, a dust of nutmeg, and pepper and salt to taste. Mix thoroughly, add the well-beaten yolk of an egg, make hot again on the broiler and serve at once.

Turkey and fillet of veal are both excellent cooked after this recipe.

Lima Beans: Take a quart of Lima beans, add two ounces of butter, four ounces of diced ham, a little sugar and salt, a teaspoonful of flour and sweet herbs to taste. Put in a greased bag with half a pint of water and cook for sixty minutes in a moderate oven.

Spinach: Pick over and thoroughly wash two pounds of spinach, leave the vegetable as wet as you can, and put it in a bag. Add a pinch of sugar and a little salt. Seal the bag and cook for thirty-five minutes. Then stand the broiler bearing the bag over a large plate, and prick the bottom of the bag in such a way as to allow all the water to run out.

Fruit Salad: Take four peeled and thinly sliced bananas, half a pound of well washed and dried Hamburg grapes, ditto strawberries, an apple, and two large oranges. Pinch each grape slightly. Hull the strawberries, peel and slice the apple and oranges very thinly. Mix all well together in a deep bowl. Pour over a small bottle of raspberry syrup and a tablespoonful of brandy. Mix well. Leave on ice till needed.

STATE HAS CHARGE OF ROADS

Eight Thousand Miles of Main Highway Under New Control.

Township supervisors all over the state lost supervision of miles of road on Saturday when the state formally took over the 8,000 miles of "main highways" in the Sprout bill. Control and maintenance of these highways henceforth will be in the hands of the state.

Only 800 miles of these roads have been improved. The remaining 7,200 are just earth roads or abandoned or condemned turnpikes. There will be 9,000 miles of roads of lesser importance, which will not come under the jurisdiction of the State Highway Department, and are not included among the thoroughfares to be improved, if the people next year approve the $50,000,000 bond issue for the building of roads.

The State Highway Commissioner, E. M. Bigelow, has divided the state into fifteen districts, and each district will be in charge of an engineer from the department, who will have charge of the highway superintendents, thirty-one of which have already been named by the commissioner. Each superintendent will have about 150 miles of highway to look after, and it will be his duty to see that repairs are made as soon as a hole or uneven spot is discovered. The improved highways will be patrolled by men who will be responsible for stretches of from one to three miles in length.

The earth roads taken over also will be improved. Machinery will be furnished by the state to the superintendents, and they will drag, scrape and roll the roads until they are smooth and as durable as possible.

Yarn of the Deep Blue Sea

One of the most unique battles ever witnessed between creatures of the sea occurred several years ago in the Pacific. Frank Bullen, a sailor, tells of seeing a duel between a whale and an octopus. The arms of the monster were entwined about the huge head of the whale. The octopus had eyes a foot in diameter, and a head large enough to contain 350 gallons. The whale was victorious.

Eating Fish in Lent Aided Navy

The connection between fish eating during Lent and a strong navy may appear remote, but to Elizabethan statesmen it seemed vital. So much so that a law was passed commanding everyone to eat fish on every day of Lent. The reasons set forth for this enactment made no mention of religious observance. It stated the queen needed ships for defense and the fishing industry furnished men at all times in readiness for her majesty's service.

A Couple of Live Wires

By ANDREW J. WHITNEY

Abraham Patterson was a real estate and insurance man, and Johnny Thacker was his chief clerk, book-keeper and man of all work, besides taking care of the office, even to sweeping out. Soon after Johnny went with the real estate man the latter's daughter, aged seventeen, came into the office one morning to get some pin money and found Johnny there alone.

This visit was the beginning of a love affair between her and Johnny. Having found a visit to the office and upon him pleasant, Delia came quite often after that, always choosing a time when her father was out drumming up or attending to business. Mr. Patterson was consequently ignorant of the growing attachment. Indeed he was unmindful of the fact that his daughter had outgrown her doll. As for Johnny, Patterson grudged him the $10 a week salary he paid him.

One day Mr. Patterson, just as he had started in for the sale of a piece of real estate upon which the commission would amount to $1,000, fell ill and was confined to his bed. Down to the office came Delia with a note from him to Johnny stating that he must give up trying to bring about the trade and so inform the seller and a buyer to whom he had hoped to sell the property. Johnny read the note and pondered.

"What you thinking about?" asked the inquisitive Delia.

"I was wondering if I could do the job."

"Of course you can." At that moment Mr. Wardell, the owner of the property in question, came in and asked if Mr. Patterson was yet down. Johnny replied that he was a trifle indisposed and wouldn't arrive till afternoon, but he (Johnny) would do anything required in the meantime. "Tell him I've decided to take $40,000 for the property."

Mr. Wardell went out, and Johnny and Delia consulted. The consultation ended in Delia keeping office while Johnny went out to find Mr. Deacon, the expected purchaser. Deacon had offered $40,000, but the price was then $42,500. Johnny asked if he would buy at the price, and Deacon told him he thought he would. But before he could determine positively he must make another visit to the property and look it over.

Johnny returned to Delia, and another consultation followed. A person had been in the office while Johnny was away from whom she had gathered that certain real estate agents of the town were getting busy about the property and a sale was likely to be made by another go-between who would gather in the commission. Delia suggested that they report to Mr. Wardell that Mr. Deacon had accepted his offer and agreed to pay the $40,000. This would complete the sale so far as Mr. Wardell was concerned, and the bottom of the transaction could only drop out through Mr. Deacon.

Unfortunately for these young brokers Mr. Deacon on his way to inspect the property slipped off the curb and sprained his ankle. His wife telephoned to the office information of the fact, saying that there was little doubt that he would buy the property, but one more visit to the premises was necessary and her husband could not go out on his sprained ankle for several days.

"It's all up!" moaned Johnny. "I've heard on the street this morning that an agent was hunting for Mr. Wardell to offer him $45,000 for the property, but can't find him."

In comes the postman with a letter from Mr. Wardell dated in a neighboring town, asking for the contract of sale to be sent him with the customary deposit. This indicated that he considered his property sold. If the young brokers could stave him off till they could get a definite answer from Deacon the sale would be effected.

"I tell you what," said Delia. "Send him a contract and purposely make an error in it. He'll have to send it back and by that time we may get Mr. Deacon up to the point."

"Good!" exclaimed Johnny, and, taking a blank contract, he filled it out on the typewriter, writing $400,000 instead of $40,000. Then he put it in a post box.

For the next two days the reports of offers for and sales of the property were in the air. The contract came back for correction, and the youngsters were at their wits' ends. Johnny went to the telephone and told Mr. Deacon that he'd have to "Yes" then or never. Deacon got a carriage, made his inspection, stopped at the office on his return and signed a contract of purchase with check for forfeiture.

As Johnny was going out of the office with him a broker came in and said: "I've got a contract of purchase signed for the Wardell property for $40,000. I can't find the owner. If you'll tell me where he is I'll divide commissions."

"Don't know anything about it," said John as he jumped into a cab and was driven in a hurry to a station. He got Wardell's signature and was back in town at 10 o'clock the next morning.

That day Patterson came to the office in care of his daughter. Johnny told him the story and showed him the contract. The real estate man looked from one to the other of the two youngsters, then he laughed.

The firm of Thacker & Co. now consists of Mr. and Mrs. Thacker. They are considered in the real estate market to be live wires.

Then followed two able talks by Rev. Krause and Rev. Pierpont, interspersed with plenty of good music by the Hittetown Band. Two baseball games were played in the afternoon, between a team from Ridgely and our boys. The first game resulted in a score of 8-4 in favor of the visitors and the second game 1-0 in favor of the visitors.

WASHINGTON LETTER

Communication From Correspondent at National Capital

CITIZENS DISGUSTED

With Taft and Roosevelt—Anti-Third-Term Club Formed—Clark Gaining Delegates.

Washington, D. C., June 1.—A statesman is a successful politician who is dead. That is the definition of a statesman that was given by the late Thomas B. Reed of Maine, who was one of the smartest men I ever knew in my life. Whilst that may be true in a general sense, I want to say that there are a few statesmen in the National Capital at this day who are not dead. I have talked not only with those statesmen, both Republicans and Democrats but with politicians in Congress on both sides of the political fence and they all express the same opinion that this fight in the Republican party for the nomination for President between Taft and Roosevelt is the most pitiable, execrable and disgraceful exhibition that has ever been seen in American politics. They all have come to the conclusion, regardless of party, that neither one of these men can be elected to the Presidency if he is nominated at Chicago.

Whilst this conclusion is very gratifying to the Democrats, it is correspondingly distasteful and worrying to the Republicans. They are all hoping, that is the Republicans, that a deadlock in the Chicago Convention will ensue and that neither of them will be nominated and that a dark horse, without regard to any particular individual, may be the Republican nominee and thus cut the Gordian knot in the Republican party controversy.

Considering all the conflicting opinions from the leaders in both parties to whom I have talked, I hesitate before the Republican National Convention to predict anything. However, it seems to me as an old-fashioned politician and political writer and a looker-on in Vienna, so to speak, that it makes no difference who carried Ohio and New Jersey as to the final outcome of the campaign. My opinion is that if the Taft leaders and the members of the National Republican Committee have a sufficiently strong hold on their own delegates, the President probably will have enough votes on the first ballot to nominate him. If they have not that hold and the delegates revolt to Roosevelt, he may be the nominee on the first ballot. If the former condition should prevail in the convention and the Roosevelt leaders know that it is inevitable that Mr. Taft is going to be nominated, they will bolt the convention, hold a convention of their own and nominate Roosevelt on the plea that he has been swindled out of the nomination by the steam roller process of the present administration. It makes no difference, whatever, which end of the bag the Republican party holds in the next campaign.

There is going to be a Democratic victory and a Democratic President in the White House after the 4th of next March. If there is not, then Thomas Jefferson's opinion of the honesty of the people of this country who vote at the polls, will have been declared a fallacy that the American electorate is not worthy of the ballot; that they do not understand republican institutions, are unfit to govern themselves and the sooner we have an empire the better off will be the people. I honestly believe that is Roosevelt's idea and that he understands the idiocy of a whole lot of people in this country because they continue to support him in the face of all the infamous lies he told and all of the sculduggery he has practiced, not only in this campaign but while he was President of the United States.

There are a lot of Democrats in this country who affect to believe, whether they do or not, that Roosevelt would be absolutely invincible as the Republican candidate for President and that no Democrat could defeat him. Those men are merely superficial observers. They have not dug under the surface sufficiently far to find that in every state Roosevelt has carried in a Presidential primary less than 50 per cent. of the Republican vote in that state has been polled for both him and Taft. What became of the other 50 per cent? They stayed at home where they will continue to stay if Roosevelt should be nominated, but regardless of that fact there is another that is very significant. With what little political experience I have had I made the assertion a few days ago when some Democrat said we could not defeat Roosevelt, that there were two million patriotic Republicans in the United States who would refuse to support any man for a third term. Almost as in corroboration of my statement the next morning's papers announced in a telegram from St. Louis that Judge Rombauer had organized a Republican anti-third term club and that he had obtained the signatures of nearly one thousand leading Republicans in St. Louis the very first day he started out.

A lot of newspapers in this country, whose editorial writers know nothing of Missouri and Missouri politics, immediately laughed at the idea. Well, I happen to have lived in St. Louis a long time, and I know that Judge Rombauer is not only one of the ablest lawyers in St. Louis but one of the leading Republicans in the state of Missouri. He is, perhaps, the strongest man intellectually in St. Louis in the Republican party. He announces that this is only a starter and that he will have over three million signers and members of his anti-third term club before he is through with it. Aside from that the most influential and ablest German newspaper in the United States is the Westliche Post which has announced that if Roosevelt is nominated, they will support the Democratic nominee. That means that one hundred thousand German Republicans in Illinois and Missouri will vote just as the Westliche Post tells them.

This whole campaign between Roosevelt and Taft and the alienation of hundreds of thousands of good Republicans from the Republican party because they believe that the criminalization and recrimination between Taft and Roosevelt has proved absolutely that the Republican party is rotten and absolutely unfit to administer the affairs of this government in the interest of the people, they have not only concluded to stay at home in these primaries, but concluded to vote for a Democrat at the next election, provided that Democrat is a sure enough Democrat who inspires their confidence in his ability, his integrity, his manhood and his American patriotism. This sort of a thought has also come to the millions of Democrats in this country and they have been doing their own thinking. They have sized up the tempestuous and tumultuous campaign of some of the candidates on the Democratic ticket, also the quiet and unostentatious campaign made by Champ Clark who has been sticking to his knitting and staying on his job while other candidates were galavanting all over the country, haranguing the people in the interest of their own nomination as well as the mendacious statements sent out from their headquarters.

A good many of us have stood on the cliffs that border the ocean and have seen the mighty waves lash themselves into fury and dash against the cliffs with mighty force. It is an awe inspiring spectacle but we must remember that all terrestrial heights and depths are measured from the calm level of the sea and not from billows. Thus, it means that the verdict of the people is being made by the calm firesides of sensible citizens of this Nation and not in political meetings where they are being harangued and told everything in the interest of some one man. They have been thinking. That's why Champ Clark has been winning delegates while attending to his duties and others have been losing delegates by spending money for special trains and appealing to the people on the rostrum.

It looks from this distance that Champ Clark is going into the convention with more votes than any other candidate, and that he will be nominated before the third ballot is over.

Lesson X.—Second Quarter, For June 9, 1912.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Luke vi, 39-49. Memory Verses, 47-49—Golden Text, Jas. i, 22—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

This seems to be our last study for the present from the sermons on the mount and on the plain and reminds us of one of our Lord's sayings on the night of His betrayal, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them" (John xiii, 17). See also His words in Luke viii, 21, "My mother and my brethren are these which hear the word of God and do it." In verse 46 of our lesson His words, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" are very similar to Matt. vii, 21. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." There is no conflict between all similar sayings and such words as these: "Being justified freely by His grace." "To him that worketh not, but believeth on Him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness." "By grace are ye saved through faith. * * * not of works." "Not by works of righteousness which we have done" (Rom. iii, 24; iv, 5; Eph. ii, 8, 9; Tit. iii, 5). The former texts refer to the life and works of saved people as an evidence before men of their salvation by the finished work of Christ, with an awful warning that no mere "say so" on our part will suffice. There will be many who profess to be the Lord's, but who are not sincere, not born from above, to whom He will say in that day, "I never knew you; depart from me ye that work iniquity" (Matt. vii, 23). Members of churches who are satisfied to be such and rest on the fact of their baptism in infancy or confirmation or standing in the church or the community, but do not know the forgiveness of sins, having never been redeemed by the precious blood of Christ, and while in their place in church once a week are wholly in the world and live only for this present world, how fearful their future in the outer darkness, where there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth (Matt. viii, 12; xiii, 42, 50; xxiii, 13; xxiv, 51; xxv, 30, 41).

While this will be the doom of many, it is not for us to judge any one, but to see to it that we ourselves are truly the Lord's and live to help others to be truly His and to let Him work in us to will and to do of His good pleasure (verses 37, 38; Phil. ii, 13). If we do not see clearly ourselves we cannot lead others, and in Matt. vii, 15, we are told of false prophets who outwardly seem to be sheep, but inwardly are ravening wolves, not living to help the sheep, but to devour them. These are more fully described in Jer. xxiii, 14-26, as speaking a vision of their own heart, prophesying deceit, making people vain, encouraging evildoers and telling them that no evil would come upon them, perverting the words of the living God. Such people wanted to kill Jeremiah because he spoke only what the Lord told him (Jer. xxvi, 7-11). The word of the Lord is not acceptable to the world and especially to the worldly part of the church, which cannot endure sound doctrine. Our Lord so taught his disciples and talked with His Father about it (John xv, 18, 19; xvii, 14). The margin of lesson, verse 40, says that every disciple shall be perfected as his Master, and Heb. ii, 10, says that the captain of our salvation was made perfect through sufferings. He was always absolutely perfect, but as our High Priest, able to sympathize, He had to be tried (Heb. ii, 17, 18) and to learn obedience by the things which He suffered (Heb. v, 8, 9).

According to our Lord's heart searching teaching when we think that we see failings in others we must remember that, while there may be a trifle wrong with the other party, the probability is that the greatest trouble is at our own end. We are not therefore to judge one another any more, but endeavor not to be a stumbling block in another's way (Rom. xiv, 13). Ambitious to be quiet and to mind one's own business (1 Thess. iv, 11. R. V., margin, and Weymouth) and to abide as branches that the vine may bear the desired fruit unhindered. The last clause of lesson, verse 45, says, "Of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." Compare Matt. xii, 34. "The mouth of fools poureth out foolishness; a wholesome tongue is a tree of life" (Prov. xv, 2, 4). I have just received a letter concerning one who was filled with pity for two others behind whom she walked whose conversation was wholly concerning dress and the fashions. Soon she found herself in the shopping district and somewhat fascinated by the very things she had condemned in others. As she passed on the words held her, "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he" (Prov. xxiii, 7). Being ashamed, she determined to fill herself with the words of Jesus that her thoughts might be controlled and that she might be more like Him. She found it a splendid remedy and has since been greatly blessed in the use of His words thus laid up in her heart. This is a practical illustration of Prov. xxiii, 18, 21 which I, too, have for many years proved in my life and teaching. It is possible to be a well of living water springing up for the benefit of others.

SUMMER SPRAYING

Apply No Strong Spray in Summer as it Will Injure the Foliage.

A Pennsylvania correspondent wrote to the State Zoologist, Prof. H. A. Surface of Harrisburg, asking if he could use the weak solution of lime-sulphur with the Codling moth spray in the spring to check the San Jose scale on trees that were infested but had not been treated previously. The reply of Professor Surface was as follows:

"Replying to your recent letter asking the effect of spraying strong lime-sulphur on trees with leaves three-fourth inches long, must say that it is liable to burn the foliage and check the growth some, but it will not be enough to kill the trees. If the trees are badly infested with scale you had better do this rather than let the scale remain unchecked."

"It will not do much good to apply a quantity of weak lime-sulphur solution for the mature or grown San Jose scale when the trees are in leaf. If it is not strong enough to burn the foliage it is not strong enough to kill the scale. The weak solution may kill some soft-bodied plant lice and some very young, tender or freshly emerged scale insects, but it does not destroy the most of these pests. The weak solution of lime-sulphur is applied by us after the blossoms drop, during the Codling moth demonstration, not for insects, but as a fungicide to guard against plant diseases. Use one gallon and one quart of the concentrated solution in forty-nine gallons of water, and to this very weak solution add two pounds of arsenate of lead. This formula is for apple, pear and quince. The material is applied just after the blossoms drop, and again in a month. For peaches and plums use only one-third as much of the lime-sulphur solution."

Soy Beans in Corn

In the south the cowpea is revolutionizing farming. It is being planted in corn at the last cultivation and turned under for the crop of cotton which follows the corn. It is simply working wonders in increased yields through the humus and nitrogen which it adds.

With us the cowpea is not adapted to this work because the first frost kills it. The soy bean will stand hard frosts, however, and keep right on growing; and under our conditions it will add even more humus and nitrogen to the soil than the cowpea. Seeded in corn at the last cultivation it is astonishing to see the amount of plant it makes to turn under. The Mammoth Soy Bean planted in corn will not make seed; but it will make an exceptionally heavy growth. After the corn is taken off it can be hogged down, or pastured or allowed to stand out all winter to prevent washing. The leaves, stalks and roots furnish a large quantity of humus-making material which decays so rapidly in the ground that its effect is felt in a very heavy increase of the crop following. It draws nitrogen from the air and stores it in the soil, where the seed has been inoculated; and we attend to getting the inoculating material for all members of the Exchange who order seed through it.

Seed 40 to 60 pounds per acre ahead of the cultivator in the corn at the last cultivation. Get orders in quickly as the price of soy beans is variable and sure to rise before long. It is not too late to sow the Mammoth Yellow for hay if orders are sent in promptly. A good many farmers did not get their oats in. The hay from the bean can be cut in time for fall grain.

Edmonton Alta., Canada, May 27.
 We are again on the move. After working for a month at Davidson Sask., we made preparations to move.

We left Davidson on the 24th at 8 a. m. and went as far as Saskatoon, where we spent the day, taking in the sights and noting the many improvements which have taken place since our last visit there.

Saskatoon is rapidly pushing its way to the front. In 1903 the population was 113 and now it is nearly 20,000; so you can imagine the rest.

We left Saskatoon and ran due north to Warman. There we had two hours' wait, during which time we looked the town over and took a photo of the depot. At last the main line train came and we boarded her for the West. It being the 24th and Queen Mary's birthday, every person was celebrating. It was similar to our 4th of July. There were fireworks, parades and rowdy crowds in nearly every town through which we passed. We rode all night and part of the 25th before we reached Edmonton. Arriving there Saturday morning, we found it a beautiful and progressive city. We attended the McDougall Methodist Church. The morning service was excellent. The sermon was delivered by the secretary of the Alberta Conference. The evening sermon was preached by Rev. Weber of Trenton, N. J. His theme was "The Mission of the Church," which he handled very masterfully.

It is raining here this morning. We are stopping at the Y. M. C. A. Expect to leave for the Wilds today.

Diamonds Under the Doorstep

Dr. Conwell, the famous Baptist preacher, tells the story of a man who left home in search of his fortune and after years of wandering, came back to find under his own steps, acres of coal—black diamonds.

Now there are heaps of folks who go hunting for diamonds when there's a mine of them at home. Mail-order buyers who can't see a bargain in their home town if it's painted in letters 5 feet high and 3 feet wide, but whose eyes catch the pica type in a mail-order catalog, at the first glance.

With our complete stocks, we've weaned many a customer from the mail-order habits. If you've been used to buying from pictures, make this your store home. You'll find here real diamonds in real merchandise, not sunbeams on bits of glass.
